Vanessa Crooke – Piano and Singing Lessons

Piano Lessons

In September there will be some spaces for piano lessons in school.

Early musical training can have a huge impact on the developing brain. It increases brain activity and memory. It improves fine motor skills, language and listening. Learning music is challenging but very rewarding and fun. It can relieve stress and can open up other social activities.

Pianists will learn to read and play music straight away. A piano or keyboard at home is essential for piano practice.

My pupils are also taught theory which expands musical knowledge and understanding.

I also teach singing from my studio at home. Singers learn about good posture, breathing technique, well-shaped vowels and clear diction. The aim is to sing in tune with a clear, free tone. They will also develop their performance skills by communicating the text. All genres of music are explored but pupils will particularly study musical theatre, classical and traditional songs. Pupils will sing songs that relate to their age and level.

My pupils have the opportunity to take the ABRSM exams in singing, piano and theory, and also Musical Theatre exams with the London College of Music, which pupils find lots of fun as they use props and can showcase not only their singing but acting and dancing too.

If your child is 6 years of age or older and is interested in having lessons please contact me for further information.
